RADICALS MAY YET OBTAIN A RESPITE

ON EVE OF ELECTROCUTION THEIR HOURS ARE NUMBERED

Notorious Anarchists who Took Life of Paymaster are Fearful of the End—Their Friends Are Pulling Every Wire To Save Their Miserable Souls—Pressure Being Brought To Bear On Governor Fuller For Clemency.

With Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti due for execution Thursday morning, demonstrations by their sympathizers Tuesday worked up toward last-minute efforts in their behalf.

Possibility of a new respite took definite shape Tuesday night when Governor Alvan T. Fuller announced that he had "taken under advisement" the plea of Attorney Arthur D. Hill of defense counsel for a further stay of execution.

Judge Webster Thayer, trial judge and now superior court judge, Tuesday refused to stay or revoke sentence. An appeal was made to the full bench from a decision refusing a writ of error. Action on the appeal was expected Wednesday.

Meantime violence or attempted violence was reported in cities throughout the world. In London a bomb exploded in a subway, but little damage was done, and police concluded it was set off as a practical joke. In Chicago police laid the bombing of an Italian Catholic church to Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers, and an unexploded bomb was found in a building next to a sub-postoffice. Boston police began investigation of the reports of caches of explosives near that city.

At Rapid City it was reiterated in behalf of President Coolidge that he considers the trial and execution a state matter and he does not expect to intervene.

Sympathetic strikers were called in such widely separated cities that no estimate of the number of workers involved was possible Tuesday night.

In New York, police broke up a parade in Fifth avenue which some Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers attempted to hold after a protest mass meeting in Union Square.

In Brussels, Belgium, communists clashed with police before the U. S. consulate, and were not dispersed until they had delivered a protest to the consul. Newark, New Jersey, police refused permits for demonstration meetings, and at Scranton, Pennsylvania, sympathizers planning to march on coal mines were dispersed.

If a new respite is granted, the governor must act "by and with the advice of his council" and the hastening of the council meeting gave rise to the belief that the new plea for a further respite will be given careful consideration.

Governor Fuller, in a brief statement issued several hours after the defense attorney left his office said:

"With legal proceedings pending before the supreme judicial court, new counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti appealed to me for a respite in order to give that court an opportunity to consider the new legal questions involved and to render a decision. I have taken the matter under advisement."

In the superior court, Judge Webster Thayer, who, after a hearing, rejected a petition for a new trial, disposed of other defense motions in his court by refusing to revoke the death sentence or to grant a stay of execution. With two possible moves still left in the state courts, Attorney Hill stressed the fact that he also still has recourse to three federal courts—district, circuit and supreme—and that he intends to take his fight there if the state courts render adverse decisions.

None of the moves will be made merely for the purpose of delaying execution, he declared after a conference with Attorney General Arthur K. Reading, and in case a further respite is granted his clients he will press his court claims with all possible speed.

Henry Ford who does not believe in capital punishment says:

"I believe Sacco and Vanzetti should not be executed. The sentence of death should be revoked with out the verdict of guilty being annulled, and this would give opportunity to weigh new evidence that may appear in the men's favor."

Leaders of the Ankuochun or northern faction in China in Peking seem optimistic of their ultimate victory over the Nationalists. In this picture are Gen. Columbus—Columbus' primary election Tuesday cost approximately $30,000, an average of $2 per vote, as it was estimated only about 15,000 votes would be cast.

Mansfield—The lightest vote ever cast at a primary was registered Tuesday when less than 500 out of a total of more than 12,000 registered voters cast their ballots.

Cleveland—Alexander Stearns, who plunged from the fifth story of a downtown office building in what police said was a suicide attempt, died today.

Canton—One man is dead and three others are suffering as result of inhaling a new gas known as H-O-2 when the gas line, a part of the cooling system in Loew's theater broke.

Middletown—George Williams, 33, former chief of police of Middletown and later a member of the raiding squad of the Seven Mile liquor court was arrested on charge of possessing and transporting liquor.

Fremont—Four years ago John Green, a Fremont boy, aided a motorist in pushing his gasless automobile to a filling station. The "good turn" saved him a fine in court. He double parked the other day and when he was haled before Mayor J. L. Connors, his honor dismissed Green. It was the mayor's car Green had pushed to the filling station.

DELIGHTFUL MOTOR TRIP.

Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Pontius and daughters, Marvene and Irene, of Thatcher, and Mr. and Mrs. Owens Morris, of Kingston, returned Tuesday after a week's visit with friends and relatives in Sycamore, Fort Wayne, Huntington and Muncie, Indiana, coming home thru Springfield and visited Mr. and Mrs. C. MAYOR'S COURT

George McCarthy and Irvin Trimmer were placed under arrest Tuesday charged with petit larceny by John Hoffman, who claims they stole an auto tire. They appeared before Mayor Fitzpatrick Wednesday morning, waived examination. They were bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $300 each, which they gave and were released.

SIGNS OF FALL.

Plovers are seen daily flying in the air, Martins are gathering nightly in flocks congregating to fly to warmer lands and in fact, their migration has begun. The cheery robin in redbreast is still with us and the katydid has arrived foretelling a frost in six weeks. Here's hoping the latter is not a true weather prophet as corn needs more of the good old summer time to grow and mature. The dying of the summer season is never welcome, for who wants winter?

BASEBALL TEAM TRIED BEATING A BOARD BILL

Durham N. C. Colored Team
Tried to Make a Getaway,
Caught is This City.

Eleven members of a colored baseball team hailing from Durham, North Carolina, were caught in this city Tuesday evening by the police department as they were winging their flight homeward in two autos. The bunch was wanted by the police department of Columbus on the charge of beating a board bill.

The team had been out on a tour for two months. Their campaign was disastrous financially and they were beating it for the Southland when they were placed under arrest. The prisoners said that Bert Wade, their manager, had all the money and had left them stranded and they had to "dig out." "That's all there is to it Boss," they told the representative of this paper, when queried. "We haven't a cent."

The team had been boarding at the home of Louise Jackson, on Hamilton, avenue, Columbus, and when she discovered that they had skipped, she got busy and swore out a warrant for their arrest. She was just in time as had she waited much longer the birds would have made their getaway in the darkness of the night, as it was nearly ten o'clock when the officers caught them.

The darkies were packed in the autos like a bunch of blackberries, when they were taken back to Columbus. The officers took no chances, the autos of the baseball team were chained to the cars of the arresting officers and the prisoners' cars were towed to Columbus.

The officers who took them back were A. T. Haynes, constable of Marion township, Franklin county; Deputy Sheriff Bayard and C. E. Underwood, deputy county surveyor.

BIG BUSINESS WANTS HOOVER FOR PRESIDENT

That Is the Echo Now That Coolidge Has Declared He Is Out of Race.

Washington, Aug. 8.—(U.P.)—Big business wants to see Secretary of Commerce Hoover succeed to the presidency.

He is being boosted strongly by the business powers of the country, with Charles Evans Hughes of New York, a close second. Vice-President Dawes, regarded by some observers as a strong potential candidate for the Republican party, lacks the support in business quarters, which, at the moment, is being concentrated chiefly on Hoover.

Coöperatives Do
Large Business

Seventy Associations Are Engaged in Marketing
Poultry and Eggs.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

American co-operative associations engaged in marketing poultry or eggs, or both, have a total membership exceeding 50,000 and do an annual business estimated at more than $40,000,000. Records of more than 70 such associations are filed in the United States Department of Agriculture.

The first association of which records are available was organized in 1913. Fifty-five of the associations have been organized since 1920. Although these 70 associations are scattered over 21 states, the majority are located in Minnesota, Missouri, California and Washington.

The associations on the Pacific coast serve members who make a business of operating large poultry ranches, and to a considerable extent this is true of organizations in the eastern states, while the associations in the Middle West serve members with small farm flocks.

Operate on City Markets.

Two associations in New York city, one in Detroit and one in St. Paul are sales agencies operating on city markets. These agencies represent associations with headquarters in the larger producing areas. One of the New York associations represents several of the large California organizations.

A duck growers' association is located on Long island, with a sales agency in New York city. This association handles a large volume of business for 80 to 100 members. Duck farming on Long island is on a commercial scale, and ranches produce anywhere from a few thousand to as many as 200,000 ducks annually. About three-fourth of the duck raisers are members of the association.

Members in Associations.

The smallest association reporting has 12 members and the largest has about 5,000, the average per association being 1,018. Three of the states—California, Missouri and Washington—handle 82 per cent of the total business accredited to associations of this kind. Fifty per cent of all the eggs marketed by co-operative associations in 1925 were handled by two of the associations. While the bulk of the business was handled by associations organized primarily for the purpose of handling poultry products, two associations, namely, Land o' Lakes Creameries and the Challenge Creamery and Butter association, each handled a large volume of eggs as a side line for the associations for which they are furnishing sales service.

Thirty-five of the associations handle live poultry and 16 dressed poultry. A total of 12,328,057 pounds of live poultry was marketed in 1925 by 31 of the associations. The co-operative marketing of poultry is confined very largely to the middle western states where the small farm flock predominates.

Bullnose or Snuffles
a Serious Pig Disease

"Bullnose" or "snuffles" is a very common and serious disease affecting pigs, a fifth disease picked up around mud holes, manure piles and dark, damp pig houses.

"Any dirty place may harbor the germs that cause this trouble," declare live stock specialists. "Little pigs often infect one another by fighting. Biting each other with their tiny sharp teeth around the nose and face leaves wounds that are easily infected as the pigs root and wallow in the dirt. This infection may occur inside of the mouth in the gums or palate. Shortly after the infection occurs, the wound may take on an ulcer-like appearance covered with a thick scab, or the face may become greatly swollen with one or more openings discharging an offensive pus."

"This swelling causes constriction of the air passages and causes the pig to snuffle as it breathes, hence the name. When the pig has reached this stage, it is hopeless and it will be much better to slaughter the pig and burn it up than to let it run around with the herd and infect others."

Agricultural Items

Inspiration and perspiration are more effective than legislation in bringing "farm relief."

Generally speaking, there is less interest in horse breeding nowadays than there used to be.

Horses will rest better and their skin function more freely if they are groomed every evening, especially while at heavy work. A light brushing will then be enough in the morning.

The daily feed of a 1,600-pound horse at hard work should consist of 20 to 24 pounds grain in three feeds and the same amount of high-quality timothy or mixed hay divided into two feeds.

There is considerable danger of botulism poisoning (botulism) when moldy corn is fed. Horses and cattle are most likely to be affected. Hogs will get sick if they eat the effects.

New Combination Dress;
Two Fabrics; Two Tones

This combination dress, according to the Woman's Home Companion, is thus named because it lends itself to the use of two fabrics or two tones of one color. This design has three versions: Jersey or other wool material
for street, a combination of crepe and
metal cloth for afternoon and chifon
and lace for evening.

Colors Becoming to Castilian Brunette

The true Castilian brunette has
fair colorless skin, brown eyes and
brown or black hair. Her becoming colors are given below. Remember
always that the shades of these colors
must correspond to the shade of your
type.

Red—In all the clear, transparent
and not too vivid shades.

Orange—With a yellowish cast, and
not too vivid.

Yellow—In every shade; undoubt-
edly the most becoming color of all
for this type.

Green—In all the clear, transparent
shades, ranging from yellowish green
to bluish green.

Blue—In rich, vivid shades again;
not the soft pastel blues that belong
to the blondes.

Purple—Clear, without too much intensity, but not the rich wine or
heather shades.

Orchid—Becoming in transparent
tones rather than smoky pastel shades.

Gray—Wearable, but not as becoming as:

Beige—Which this type can wear
better than any other type.

Brown—Not especially becoming.

Black—Becoming, but sometimes
too heavy and somber for the personality unless lighted by a color touch.

White—Ideal.

Silver—A bit more becoming to the
personality than gold.

Voile Handkerchiefs of
Man-Size Proportions

Fine voile handkerchiefs of man-
size proportions are decorative as well
as useful, for they add a pleasing
note to any sports costume when seen
drooping from a pocket. Wide hems
and hand-drawn work with a bit of
colorful embroidery here and there
furnish the means of embellishment.
These lovely kerchiefs come in the
light shades of rose, beige, lavender,
maize and blue. Large squares of
chiffon and georgette make the most
entrancing handkerchiefs, especially
in patterns favoring the floral themes,
where several shades of one color may
be artfully blended in an all-over design. Tiny rolled hems stand out especially, for they usually are of black
and so narrow that they supply the
right amount of color contrast.

Fringed Negligee One
of Season's Favorites

The fringed negligee is perhaps the most feminine one of the season. The fringed negligee is the only extremely
feminine type which bears launder-
ing well since lace-trimmed models
are not durable unless continually
dry-cleaned. Fringe washes well and
after washing all that is required is
hanging the garment on a dress hang-
er. After the fringe is thoroughly
dried one can press the satin foundation with an iron. The most attractive fringed robe is made exactly like
a cape-coat except that it has no
sleeves. The main portion of the robe
is plain, opened in front and sleeve-
less and a hip-length cape extends
over this. Cape and skirt portion
have fringed borders. A narrow satin
sash extends about the low waistline.

Stepping in the Right Direction

Pumps of red, blue or green lend a
striking dash of color to the black
and white costumes that are so generally popular.

DISTURBS TOWNAppears on Wall Near Picture
of Dead Man.Aosta, Italy.—Priests and spiritual-
ists, using respectively exorcisms and mediums, are seeking to probe the mystery of a shadowy hand, which for some weeks now has been disturbing
the family peace of a modest workman, Giuseppe Della Villa, who lives here with his wife and four children.Some months ago, a brother of Della Villa, who lived in the house, died, and a few weeks ago, the family hung up a photographic enlargement of the deceased in the room in which he slept.The first signs of the psychic
phenomenon were noted by Della Villa
and his wife one night about ten o'clock. The clearly defined shadow of a hand appeared on the wall close
to the photograph, and the fingers
opened and closed as if trying to grasp something.The neighbors were called in, and the phenomenon was repeated in the presence of half a dozen people. The dead hand was shadowed on the wall
near the photograph on several other occasions, always at night time, and
the parish priest was called in to pronounce an exorcism.This seems to have produced no effect on the shadowy hand, which continued to show up every other night
about bedtime.Some local spiritualists then interested themselves, and brought a medium to the house. According to the medium, the hand is a spirit manifestation from the dead brother, who is trying to convey a message to the family. What this message is, the medium does not pretend to know.Plan to Strengthen Plane Wings FoundWashington.—Patent work at the bureau of standards is gradually evolving a solution for the problem of aluminum corrosion which may greatly increase the utility of aircraft.Airplane wings constructed of "doped" cloth stretched over wooden frames are fragile things. To the layman it has long seemed that the strength and durability of the wings
would be greater if the frames were made of steel or some aluminum al-
loy.The possibilities of metal wings,
however, have been greatly restricted by
the disposition of the complex alloys to corrode and ruin the expensive
fabrics even more rapidly than the conditions of operation have worn out
the cloth and wooden structures.The bureau workers, aided by industrial laboratory experts and equipment, have been seeking a solution of the metal difficulties for some time.They have determined that, if duraluminum, one of the aluminum alloys
of sufficient lightness and strength
for plane wings, is coated with pure
aluminum by a metal spray process,
it can stand even salt water exposure
for a year without deterioration.Some experts are hopeful that by adding a corrosion resistant to the material through special treatment of the alloy during preparation it will be possible to produce all-metal aircraft
that will be fireproof and durable.Exhume Shakespeare
for Science, DemandLondon.—The body of William Shakespeare may at last be unearthed
in the interest of science. For 300
years his grave has been protected by the awe-inspiring verse which says:Good Friend for Jesus Sake Forbear
To Dig the Dust Enclosed Heare,
Blest be ye Man yt Spares Thes Stones,
And Cysrt be he yt Moves my Bones.But now a movement is on foot to ask for a "reverent and scientific official examination" of the poet's grave
and a measurement of his skull.A British scientific journal, the Antiquarian, calls attention to the fact
that while the remains of Ben Jonson, Milton and Cromwell were subjected to indignities, on the other hand, a number of famous men's bones have been disinterred in a manner which made the ceremony a tribute to their greatness.New ProblemWashington.—A new problem for officials in cities with a colored lighting system for traffic control has developed—color blindness of automobile drivers.California Once Was

are now dry land in California.

ported by Dr. William K. Greg-

by a San Diego naturalist,

How a person reacts to surprise, fear, love, alcohol, coffee, or cigarettes is said to be revealed with scientific accuracy by a new "vitality meter," which records graphically the rate and nature of pulses. Met at Home of Miss Virginia
Porter—Next Meeting With Miss Mary List.

The Monroe Champion Sewing club
met at the home of Miss Virginia
Porter on July 19.

Our meeting was opened by repeating the Lord's prayer. Each member read a verse from the Bible
when roll was called. All members sang some songs with Miss Julia Hosler as pianist, old business and new business was brought before the house and discussed.

The girls accomplished very much
in our sewing. Our plans were discussed about the picnic at Carpen-

should bring. After our meeting was over refreshments were served by Mrs. Porter and daughters. We ad-
joined to meet at the home of Miss

Longer Skirts to Be Mode in Paris

Brevity, However, Continues for Sports Clothes for Sake of Activity.

Paris has already signed her Letter
of Fashions for late summer days and the early days of autumn, so that as fast as one successful wardrobe is completed, one's mind and eye turns
to the edicts of the famous couturiers
in Paris. The "dernier cri" in matters of good dressing says a Paris fashion
correspondent in the Kansas City Star, come to the world through collections of models shown for the
"demi-saison," as the French term
midseason clothes. But when all is said and done, the new models do not mean those exclusively for between
seasons but herald, as well, coats,
suits and many frocks which are to be worn in the early autumn.

One of the most important topics in the world of fashion is that of the length of skirts, and upon this pivots
one of the most exciting bits of news
that rushes out of the dressmaking
portals. They are longer. With these few words, it seems that the whole story is told, but much more is to be said upon this vital subject in the ways of the mode. Sports clothes obviously hew to the line of brevity for the sake of activity, so that the distance of the hemline from the ground
instantly segregates fashions into two wholly different classes: those of sports character and dressy types. For afternoon and evening wear Paris not only sponsors but accepts the longer
skirt, an idea which glided forth in many guises for the early summer
modes and which now stands as an established fact. Midseason showings
have emphasized the longer-skirted
frock, not only in its illusion, but in its reality, and frankly shows that the lengthened skirt is not a fly-by-night
fashion, but one that is descending
upon us with avidity.

In an attractive frock named
"Folie," the loose panels, which remind one of box plaits, come below
the body of the dress, which in itself
is longer, while the panels add a few more inches to the depth. But this is only one of hundreds of frocks
shown in Paris wherein the skirt is longer. Circular skirts are both longer and wider. Draped models always descend at the point of the drapery
whether this is in the center front of the skirt or one side, while fan-plait-
ing is inset at both sides of the skirt
to give fullness as well as depth at these side points. A point of length,
shown in earlier collections—the long
back dip in evening gowns of chiffon
—finds emphasis in the midseason
shows so that one is guided into safe
channels of correct fashions by choosing a simple unadorned gown in either
a pastel tone or one of the small floral
prints which have such great vogue
this season.

As if a vote had been taken as to which color would be most popular
for late summer and early autumn,
the couturiers of Paris showed quantities of gray in every imaginable type of frock, coat and ensemble. Unlike the grays we used to know, the new grays
have a pinkish tone, and some appear
to be mixed with white, which softens
them enough to become many types of coloring. Blues are passing because the strain of popularity is too great to hold them for the late mode, and in the place of blue comes golden and reddish brown shades, which taper to points of biscuit and delicate tints of champagne. Green stands among the unbanished, while purple tones, such
as those of the pansy and violet ink,
advance with enthusiasm in the procession of colors.

Chic Street Frock of Saturn Red Frost Crepe

Yvonne Taylor, motion picture player, wearing a smart street frock of satin red frost crepe. The two tiers
of the skirt are edged with red and white checks, while the same motif
trims the bell-shaped sleeves and the square neckline. The yoke in the bodice is tucked with georgette. A black patent leather belt is worn.

AMUSEMENTS

If you ever wanted to wring the neck of the lady who gives you wrong numbers or if you've ever felt
a desire to punch the individual who rings off in the middle of interesting conversations, come on down to the Met theater. "The Telephone Girl"
as portrayed by Madge Bellamy in Paramount's latest Herbert Brennon
production, proves to be a winsome
little miss who is more to be praised
than impaled. In addition to this,
she's quite brave and refuses to give
a number—altho it's in the interest
of the plot that this is done.

And talking of plot, "The Telephone Girl" has lots of it. Remember William C. De Mille's play "The Woman?" Elizabeth Meehan based her scenario on Mr. De Mille's thriller. It seems that some years before the picture opens there had been an Atlantic City excursion in which two persons had met and separated. Then we switch to election eve and a dinner being given to Matthew Standish, the man who will seemingly become governor. His opponent, Governor Mark Robinson, has discovered
the forgotten incident and is endeavoring to use it. The owner of the party's newspaper promises to print the story only if the woman's name can be found.

Standish is now happily married as
is the woman. Two political machines
go into action. What's the outcome?
As the evening advances all the separate wires start to gather and right into Kitty O'Brien's hands! Kitty is the telephone operator at Standish
hotel. There's also added interest in Kitty's love affair with Tom Blake,
Robinson's brother-in-law.

Intelligent direction is contributed
by Mr. Brenon and all the players
give admirably polished performances. In addition to Miss Bellamy
Holbrook Binn, Warner Baxter, May

Oriental Delicacy

One of the most delicious vegetables
used in great quantities in the Orient
and now being introduced into this country is the young bamboo shoot.
Chinese consider the tiny shoots of the bamboo a delicacy. In many re-paragus.

AN IMPROVEMENT

"All men," said the woman who had kept a boarding house—"all men, dearie, is brutes."
Her friend nodded her gray head wisely. She had been married twice.
"Yes," she agreed. "No one knows that better than me, an' though me second ain't no saint, I'll say this for 'im—he's better'n me first. He's in jail so much that I have practically all I earn for me own use!"

Same Substance

"Molly," said some one to the little daughter of the clergyman, "does your father preach the same sermon twice?"
"I think perhaps he does," returned Molly cautiously, "but he talks loud and soft in different places the second time, so it doesn't sound the same."

Gentle Father

The hour was late. All was hushed and dark. Suddenly the stillness was broken by a crash from upstairs.
"G-g-good heavens, what was that, d-d-d-darling?" exclaimed the timid young man.
"Merely father dropping a hint," replied the girl, quite unalarmed.

"Don't you hate crowds?"
"I should think I do. At the last football match I fainted and had to walk three miles before I could fall down."

Why Mince Words?

This is the open season when automobile manufacturers go gunning for buyers. Read the extravagant claims . . the boasts . . the adjectives and superlatives. You are entitled to the facts. Every high priced, largest-type car has lost sales this year. Although several of the smaller, low-priced cars show gains, the industry as a whole shows a loss as this is written. Yet in contrast Auburn in the first 5½ months of this year built as many cars as all of last year. And in 1926 Auburn doubled its production over 1925. New type merchandise, of greater value for less money did it. Cars that perform better, ride and drive easier and endure longer did it. The Straight Eight type of car is the undisputed leader today. No Straight Eight is more successful than Auburn. Facts prove it, in the hands of owners as well as in official contests conducted by the American Automobile Association. The reasons for Auburn's extraordinary success are all built into the car itself. We claim it is the greatest value on the market . . . bar none . . . and will let the car itself prove it with you at the wheel.

Extensive Entertainment Program is Announced For Ohio State Fair
In addition to the automobile and horse races and a musical program, many vaudeville and hippodrome acts have been contracted for to round out the entertainment phase of the 1927 Ohio State Fair, which begins August 26, at Columbus. The entertainment features will be both at the Coliseum and at the Grandstand, the performance at the Coliseum serving as a complement to the main attraction—the Night Horse Show proper.

THE LUNATIC BAKERS
Grandstand, the performance at the Coliseum serving as a complement to the main attraction—the Night Horse Show proper. Announcement of the booking for the Fair of the Uylene Japs immediately acquaints amusement lovers with the fact that this is one of the cleverest of Oriental Sextettes that has ever appeared at any fair. In this meritorious act there are six athletic young men, who appear in an equilibristic pot-pourri that for speed agility and originality is unequalled. The Uylene Japs are quite an innovation in this country, having been playing the leading theatres throughout the world.

LABOR DAY PROGRAM AT STATE FAIR
For the first time in the history of the Ohio State Fair, the management is sponsoring a Labor Day Program at the fair grounds. A huge celebration of central Ohio labor organization is being planned with the wholehearted co-operation of the State Department of Agriculture. Thus the "World's Greatest Agricultural Exposition" is to be brought to a close with America's largest Labor Day celebration.

PRIZE LIVE STOCK TO BE PARADED
At noon Friday comes "The Big Parade" at the Ohio State Fair, when the prize-winners of the first four days parade around the race-track oval. But there is a live-stock parade every evening at 7:00 o'clock in the Coliseum. The cattle shown during the day will parade immediately after the horse parade. Each day four breeds or classes will be shown and cattle exhibited during the day must be paraded in the Coliseum that evening. Exhibitors bring their own cattle into the parade. Since the average exhibitor shows six or eight head of cattle, generally in charge of a herdman, the fair management provides as many extra leaders as each exhibitor may require to handle his animals in the parade. Remember the dates this year—August 29th to September 3rd.

BULB INJURY CAUSED IT ALL
Dr. E. E. Oliver Recalls What Wood's Former Secretary Told Him In the Philippines.

How did Major-General Leonard Wood's trouble start? That question can be answered by Dr. E. E. Oliver who was serving the government in the Philippines at the time that General Wood was first operated on for removal of a tumor from his skull.

Dr. Oliver learned of it from Charles Moralis, who had been secretary to General Wood in Cuba and who was much concerned about his former chief's condition at the time.

Moralis told Dr. Oliver that at the time General Wood was in Cuba he was injured when arising from his desk. His head came in contact with the sharp point of an electric light bulb and the scalp was punctured.

From that time on his trouble developed and explains why the government did not call on General Wood for much active service during the World War.

It also explains why he was sent to Argentina as an envoy for it gave him a chance to recuperate.—Chillicothe News-Advertiser.

G LORIA MEMO had always been of the opinion that she would marry no one who did not love nature and beauty even as much as she did. Now, with two suitors, she repeated the declaration and wished that Malcomb Turner, large and quiet, would say or do something to qualify in her lists.

If Malcomb loved beauty he kept it to himself or displayed the affection by driving her to places which called forth her enthusiasm. He had no words for a sunset, no rhapsodies for a grove or a forest stream. Sometimes the girl wondered if the presence of beauty did not silence him and if this might be proof of a greater appreciation than was hers. Again she questioned his capabilities to admire. Gloria was puzzled and a little disappointed. Then Winton Downs, long of hair and soft of voice, came to town and talked and talked to her rapidly of many things of which she had never dreamed.

"I am a poet at soul," said Winton. "and my poems are no less great because they are felt and not expressed. I am not one of those who would fasten names to the flowers and ticket the birds." There was more in the same strain and at last Gloria felt she was in the presence of a man who knew and understood. Suddenly the prosaic Malcomb appeared as no more than one of the plodding millions.

From the first the two men had no liking for each other. Winton professed an entire lack of understanding of one who could be so indifferent to the niceties and delicacies of life, and Malcomb regarded Downs as an insect buzzing for a swat. And this was the situation when Gloria prevailed upon Malcomb to drive the three to a week-end party in the hills.

"I told Jessie," she said, speaking of the hostess, "that you would drive Winton and me out."

After the car had left the highway and was running slower over an ascending and dust-cushioned Vermont road, Winton became impressed with a blue haze which filled the hollows. He could talk of nothing else and Gloria, rejoicing in her companion, gave him all her attention.

"Blue haze," Malcomb grunted, "that's smoke." He appeared nervous and stepped on the gas while the poet and the girl exchanged glances which spoke pity of a man who could see in this purple veiling nothing but smoke.

A group of dirt-streaked, excited men halted them as they rounded a curve.

"You stay with the car and be ready to drive back for supplies," one ordered Gloria, showing a star as he talked. "and you two take flails and follow Bill, there."

"But I say," Winton protested, "we are on our way to a party." Malcomb had peeled his coat and was rolling up his sleeves.

"Well, you'll have party enough. There's a bad fire burning and if we don't beat it soon, it will be in the state grove. Hurry!"

It was Malcomb who seized Winton and forced him along until they joined a long line of men fighting desperately to beat out an edging front of flame which, downed at one place, came to life in another. The air was filled with choking smoke and the heat was all but unbearable. The noise of heavy sacks slapped upon burning grass fell in the crackle of blazing brush. Doggedly, desperately the men fought, their faces streaming with sweat and their muscles aching. Malcomb worked so hard he had no opportunity to watch Winton. At the end of two hours the wind died and the line of flails which had been given way advanced. There was a triumphant shout along the row of blackened men.

Back to the road they came, happy and tired.

"We saved the grove!" Malcomb greeted Gloria, and she looked at him wonderingly. She sought Winton and found him talking to the leader of the crew.

"You may be sure," he was saying, "I will send in a bill for ruined clothes and for my time and that with it will go my formal protest. You had no right." Malcomb pulled him away, thrust him into the automobile and drove on. It was a silent ride, but Gloria, this time, was seated beside the driver while the angry poet rode alone behind.

"The grove," Gloria said at last, "you helped to save it."

"It was the best day's work I have done in years."

"Malcomb," said Gloria, after another pause, "I have learned that there are better ways of proving one's love for the beautiful than by talking." And they quite forgot the man in the back seat.

Great French

"When the Legion gets to Paris some great French will be heard."

John J. Wicker, Jr., national travel director, was talking at a luncheon in New York about the Legion's forthcoming Paris convention.

"Yes," he went on, "the Parisian waiter will hear a lot of French like the movie queen's."

"A cafe-au-lait, still voo play, without milk," said the movie queen.

"The waiter smiled in the polite yet subtle French way."

POMPEII'S FALL

TOLD BY PLINY

Excavation Work by Italy
Recalls Narrative by Eyewitness.

New York.—As the work of excavating Herculaneum officially began under the auspices of Italy's king the other day, old Vesuvius stirred and started into life, hurling blazing rocks and smoke clouds high into the air as if in protest at the unearthing of a city it had buried 1,848 years ago. But, according to scientists, there is little danger of Mount Vesuvius repeating the terrific outbursts of 79 A. D., and so the celebrating throngs made merry, even into the night, when brilliant fireworks lighted up the Bay of Naples, vying with the bursts of flame high up in the volcano's crater.

It is a different picture that Pliny the Younger draws—a picture of terror-ridden days and nights, presaged by violent earth tremors that leveled many houses before the awful spectacle of fire was dimly seen through a rain of blazing stone and ash by a doomed humanity. Yet concerning the disaster he writes with a philosophical detachment that makes one wonder at his powers of observation and presence of mind in such a panicky time.

Eighteen at Time of Disaster.

Pliny the Younger was only eighteen at the time of Mount Vesuvius' eruption, yet remarkably precocious and devoted to study. Born to riches in an honorable family, the early death of his father led to his adoption as a son by the elder Pliny, his uncle. Caius Plinius Caecilius Secundus was the youth's name, his mother being Plinia, the elder Pliny's sister, and his father, Caius Caecilius, of a plebeian family that nevertheless numbered consuls and other men of note in its ranks. The father's health, however, probably was responsible for the fame his son achieved, for the elder Pliny, renowned naturalist and man of letters, saw to it that his adopted son was given the best of education and schooled in the literary and philosophical learning that meant so much to him.

Vespasian, first emperor of the Flavian dynasty, came to the end of his worthy rule over Rome in the year tragedy stalked in the Bay of Naples. The dissolute times of Nero had been followed with the bloodshed of civil wars under the Emperors Galba, Otho, and Vitellius before Vespasian was placed at the empire's head to restore good times. He passed on to his son, Titus, the rule of Rome, and the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum. In the first summer of Titus' short reign, was one of three tragedies that marred his otherwise excellent disposition of Roman government. A fire in Rome nearly as bad as that of Nero's day and a time of plague which followed it were the other two.

No Indication of Eruption.

To the Romans clustered along the beautiful shores of the Bay of Naples in villas and close-built cities in 79 A. D., there was no indication that Mount Vesuvius might erupt. Earthquakes were not uncommon in the region; in fact, one in 63 A. D. had been of a devastating nature. The Roman towns grouped along the crescent-shaped bay shore, starting at the northern promontory, were: Misenum, Baiæ, Puteoli, Neapolis, Herculaneum, Pompeii and Stabiae.

At Misenum existed a naval station, Baiæ was a popular bathing resort, Neapolis was one of the largest Roman metropolises, Pompeii was a more or less commercial center, and Herculaneum the summer resort of the wealthy. For this reason the task of digging it from beneath 100 feet of lava and volcanic mud is expected to reveal finer literary and art treasures than those uncovered at Pompeii in the past.

Pliny the Younger, in 79 A. D., was spending the summer with his uncle and mother near Misenum, the elder Pliny being in command of the Roman fleet stationed there. To the south and east rose the vine and tree-clad mountain slopes, completely covering Vesuvius in such manner that there was no suspicion of volcanic forces slumbering there.

Saw Death of Uncle.

Here Pliny, who began practice as an advocate a year later, witnessed the eruption and saw his uncle go to his death in an effort to rescue people caught on the bay shore closer to the volcano's mouth. Pliny's description of the disaster the world owes to the historian Tacitus, who some years later wrote asking for the details surrounding the elder Pliny's death and for an account of the dangers which the youth himself escaped.

"On the 24th of August," Pliny first wrote, "about one in the afternoon, my mother desired him (the elder Pliny) to observe a cloud which appeared of a very unusual size and shape. He had just taken a turn in the sun, and after bathing himself in cold water, and making a light luncheon, gone back to his books; he immediately arose and went upon a rising ground from whence he might get a better sight of this very uncommon appearance."

"A cloud, from which mountain was uncertain at this distance, was ascending, the appearance of which I can not give you a more exact description of than by likening it to a pine tree, for it shot up to a great height in the form of a very tall trunk, which spread itself out at the top into a sort of branches, occasioned, I imagine, either by a sudden gust of air that impelled it, the force of which decreased as it advanced upward, or the cloud itself, being pressed back again by its own weight, expanded in the manner I have mentioned; it appeared sometimes bright and sometimes dark and spotted, according as it was either more or less impregnated with earth and cinders."

Youth Stays to Study.

"This phenomenon seemed to a man of such learning and research as my uncle extraordinary and worth further looking into. He ordered a light vessel to be got ready, and gave me leave, if I liked, to accompany him. I said I had rather go on with my work; and it so happened he had himself given me something to write out. As he was coming out of the house, he received a note from Rectina, the wife of Bassus, who was in the utmost alarm at the imminent danger which threatened her; for, her villa lying at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, there was no way of escape but by sea. She earnestly entreated him therefore to come to her assistance. He accordingly changed his first intention, and what he had begun from a philosophical he now carried out in a noble and generous spirit."

Burning Rocks Fall on Ships.

"He was now so close to the mountain that the cinders, which grew thicker and hotter the nearer he approached, fell into the ships, together with pumice stones and black pieces of burning rock; they were in danger, too, not only of being aground by the sudden retreat of the sea, but also from the vast fragments which rolled down from the mountain and obstructed all the shore. Here he stopped to consider whether he should turn back again; to which the pilot advising him, 'Fortune,' said he 'favors the brave; steer to where Pompeianus lies.'"

The brave elder Pliny, his nephew told Tacitus, won his way to the shore where he greeted his friend Pompeianus, maintaining a cool front in the face of nature's cataclysm for the benefit of the latter by ordering a bath and lying down to sleep as night came, on and the turbulent waves prevented them from sailing away. Pliny continues:

Nearly Hemmed In.

"The court which led to his (the sleeping Pliny's) apartment being now almost filled with stones and ashes, if he had continued there any time longer, it would have been impossible for him to have made his way out. So he was awakened and got up, and went to Pompeianus and the rest of his company, who were feeling too anxious to think of going to bed. They consulted together whether it would be most prudent to trust to the houses, which now rocked from side to side with frequent and violent concussions as though shaken from their very foundations; or to fly to the open fields, where calined stones and cinders, though light indeed, yet fell in large showers and threatened destruction."

The trapped Romans finally decided for the fields and went out "having pillows tied upon their heads" for protection, and after going to the shore of the bay the elder Pliny suddenly fell and died. The opinion of his nephew was that death came from suffocation from the fumes in the air, but it is probable that a sudden attack of illness was responsible, since Stabiae, whither he had gone, was about ten miles from the volcano's mouth. Pliny's account of his uncle's death was followed by another letter to Tacitus in which he described his and his mother's escape.

Earthquake Felt First.

"There had been noticed for many days before," he wrote, "a trembling of the earth, which did not alarm us much, as this is quite an ordinary occurrence in Campania; but it was so particularly violent that night that it not only shook but actually overturned, as it would seem, everything about us."

Pliny and his mother were both awakened from uneasy sleep after the elder Pliny had gone and fled the house to sit in an open courtyard. There the youth began nonchalantly to read "Livy," as he says, either in "courage or folly," and he continued, although a friend of his uncle's reproved him. The tottering buildings finally persuaded them to leave the town.

Escapes With Mother.

After this a black cloud of ashes came upon them, and Pliny led his mother by the hand to a place away from the main road, so that they would not be trampled by the panic-stricken mobs in flight. He vividly describes the cries made by parents and children separated and lost in the blackness of artificial night and the oft-expressed fear that the end of the world had come.

When light at last returned Pliny and his mother went back to Misenum to await the sad news of his uncle and he closes his letter to Tacitus with the modest declaration that his narrative is "not in the least worthy for inclusion in history; a fact which literature today vehemently disputes, inasmuch as Pliny's story remains the world's most thorough and enlightening description of a disaster nearly nineteen centuries ago, and the only written account by an eyewitness."

RADICALS MAY YET OBTAIN A RESPITE

ON EVE OF ELECTROCUTION THEIR HOURS ARE NUMBERED

Notorious Anarchists who Took Life of Paymaster are Fearful of the End—Their Friends Are Pulling Every Wire To Save Their Miserable Souls—Pressure Being Brought To Bear On Governor Fuller For Clemency.

With Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti due for execution Thursday morning, demonstrations by their sympathizers Tuesday worked up toward last-minute efforts in their behalf.

Possibility of a new respite took definite shape Tuesday night when Governor Alvan T. Fuller announced that he had "taken under advisement" the plea of Attorney Arthur D. Hill of defense counsel for a further stay of execution.

Judge Webster Thayer, trial judge and now superior court judge, Tuesday refused to stay or revoke sentence. An appeal was made to the full bench from a decision refusing a writ of error. Action on the appeal was expected Wednesday.

Meantime violence or attempted violence was reported in cities throughout the world. In London a bomb exploded in a subway, but little damage was done, and police concluded it was set off as a practical joke. In Chicago police laid the bombing of an Italian Catholic church to Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers, and an unexploded bomb was found in a building next to a sub-postoffice. Boston police began investigation of the reports of caches of explosives near that city.

At Rapid City it was reiterated in behalf of President Coolidge that he considers the trial and execution a state matter and he does not expect to intervene.

Sympathetic strikers were called in such widely separated cities that no estimate of the number of workers involved was possible Tuesday night.

In New York, police broke up a parade in Fifth avenue which some Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers attempted to hold after a protest mass meeting in Union Square.

In Brussels, Belgium, communists clashed with police before the U. S. consulate, and were not dispersed until they had delivered a protest to the consul. Newark, New Jersey, police refused permits for demonstration meetings, and at Scranton, Pennsylvania, sympathizers planning to march on coal mines were dispersed.

If a new respite is granted, the governor must act "by and with the advice of his council" and the hastening of the council meeting gave rise to the belief that the new plea for a further respite will be given careful consideration.

Governor Fuller, in a brief statement issued several hours after the defense attorney left his office said:

"With legal proceedings pending before the supreme judicial court, new counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti appealed to me for a respite in order to give that court an opportunity to consider the new legal questions involved and to render a decision. I have taken the matter under advisement."

ster Thayer, who, after a hearing, rejected a petition for a new trial, disposed of other defense motions in his court by refusing to revoke the death sentence or to grant a stay of execution. With two possible moves still left in the state courts, Attorney Hill stressed the fact that he also still has recourse to three federal courts—district, circuit and supreme—and that he intends to take his fight there if the state courts render adverse decisions.

None of the moves will be made merely for the purpose of delaying execution, he declared after a conference with Attorney General Arthur K. Reading, and in case a further respite is granted his clients he will press his court claims with all possible speed.

Henry Ford who does not believe in capital punishment says:

"I believe Sacco and Vanzetti should not be executed. The sentence of death should be revoked with out the verdict of guilty being annulled, and this would give opportunity to weigh new evidence that may appear in the men's favor."

Columbus—Columbus' primary election Tuesday cost approximately $30,000, an average of $2 per vote, as it was estimated only about 15,000 votes would be cast.

Mansfield—The lightest vote ever cast at a primary was registered Tuesday when less than 500 out of a total of more than 12,000 registered voters cast their ballots.

Cleveland—Alexander Stearns, who plunged from the fifth story of a downtown office building in what police said was a suicide attempt, died today.

Canton—One man is dead and three others are suffering as result of inhaling a new gas known as H-O-2 when the gas line, a part of the cooling system in Loew's theater broke.

Middletown—George Williams, 33, former chief of police of Middletown and later a member of the raiding squad of the Seven Mile liquor court was arrested on charge of possessing and transporting liquor.

Fremont—Four years ago John Green, a Fremont boy, aided a motorist in pushing his gasless automobile to a filling station. The "good turn" saved him a fine in court. He double parked the other day and when he was haled before Mayor J. L. Conners, his honor dismissed Green. It was the mayor's car Green had pushed to the filling station.

BASEBALL TEAM TRIED BEATING A BOARD BILL

Durham N. C. Colored Team
Tried to Make a Getaway,
Caught is This City.

Eleven members of a colored baseball team hailing from Durham, North Carolina, were caught in this city Tuesday evening by the police department as they were winging their flight homeward in two autos. The bunch was wanted by the police department of Columbus on the charge of beating a board bill.

The team had been out on a tour for two months. Their campaign was disastrous financially and they were beating it for the Southland when they were placed under arrest. The prisoners said that Bert Wade, their manager, had all the money and had left them stranded and they had to "dig out." "That's all there is to it Boss," they told the representative of this paper, when queried. "We haven't a cent."

The team had been boarding at the home of Louise Jackson, on Hamilton, avenue, Columbus, and when she discovered that they had skipped, she got busy and swore out a warrant for their arrest. She was just in time as had she waited much longer the birds would have made their getaway in the darkness of the night, as it was nearly ten o'clock when the officers caught them.

The darkies were packed in the autos like a bunch of blackberries, when they were taken back to Columbus. The officers took no chances, the autos of the baseball team were chained to the cars of the arresting officers and the prisoners' cars were towed to Columbus.

The officers who took them back were A. T. Haynes, constable of Marion township, Franklin county; Deputy Sheriff Bayard and C. E. Underwood, deputy county surveyor.

BIG BUSINESS WANTS HOOVER FOR PRESIDENT

That Is the Echo Now That Coolidge Has Declared He Is Out of Race.

Washington, Aug. 8.—(UP.)—Big business wants to see Secretary of Commerce Hoover succeed to the presidency.

He is being boosted strongly by the business powers of the country, with Charles Evans Hughes of New York, a close second. Vice-President Dawes, regarded by some observers as a strong potential candidate for the Republican party, lacks the support in business quarters, which, at the moment, is being concentrated chiefly on Hoover.

Coöperatives Do Large Business

Seventy Associations Are Engaged in Marketing Poultry and Eggs.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

American co-operative associations engaged in marketing poultry or eggs, or both, have a total membership exceeding 50,000 and do an annual business estimated at more than $40,000,000. Records of more than 70 such associations are filed in the United States Department of Agriculture.

The first association of which records are available was organized in 1913. Fifty-five of the associations have been organized since 1920. Although these 70 associations are scattered over 21 states, the majority are located in Minnesota, Missouri, California and Washington.

The associations on the Pacific coast serve members who make a business of operating large poultry ranches, and to a considerable extent this is true of organizations in the eastern states, while the associations in the Middle West serve members with small farm flocks.

Operate on City Markets.

Two associations in New York city, one in Detroit and one in St. Paul are sales agencies operating on city markets. These agencies represent associations with headquarters in the larger producing areas. One of the New York associations represents several of the large California organizations.

A duck growers' association is located on Long island, with a sales agency in New York city. This association handles a large volume of business for 80 to 100 members. Duck farming on Long island is on a commercial scale, and ranches produce anywhere from a few thousand to as many as 200,000 ducks annually. About three-fourth of the duck raisers are members of the association.

Members in Associations.

The smallest association reporting has 12 members and the largest has about 5,000, the average per association being 1,018. Three of the states—California, Missouri and Washington—handle 82 per cent of the total business accredited to associations of this kind. Fifty per cent of all the eggs marketed by co-operative associations in 1925 were handled by two of the associations. While the bulk of the business was handled by associations organized primarily for the purpose of handling poultry products, two associations, namely, Land o' Lakes Creameries and the Challenge Creamery and Butter association, each handled a large volume of eggs as a side line for the associations for which they are furnishing sales service.

Thirty-five of the associations handle live poultry and 16 dressed poultry. A total of 12,328,057 pounds of live poultry was marketed in 1925 by 31 of the associations. The co-operative marketing of poultry is confined very largely to the middle western states where the small farm flock predominates.

Bullnose or Snuffles

a Serious Pig Disease

"Bullnose" or "snuffles" is a very common and serious disease affecting pigs, a fifth disease picked up around mud holes, manure piles and dark, damp pig houses.

"Any dirty place may harbor the germs that cause this trouble," declare live stock specialists. "Little pigs often infect one another by fighting. Biting each other with their tiny sharp teeth around the nose and face leaves wounds that are easily infected as the pigs root and wallow in the dirt. This infection may occur inside of the mouth in the gums or palate. Shortly after the infection occurs, the wound may take on an ulcer-like appearance covered with a thick scab, or the face may become greatly swollen with one or more openings discharging an offensive pus."

"This swelling causes constriction of the air passages and causes the pig to snuffle as it breathes, hence the name. When the pig has reached this stage, it is hopeless and it will be much better to slaughter the pig and burn it up than to let it run around with the herd and infect others."

Agricultural Items

Inspiration and perspiration are more effective than legislation in bringing "fama relief."

Generally speaking, there is less interest in horse breeding nowadays than there used to be.

Horses will rest better and their skin function more freely if they are groomed every evening, especially while at heavy work. A light brushing will then be enough in the morning.

The daily feed of a 1,600-pound horse at hard work should consist of 20 to 24 pounds grain in three feeds and the same amount of high-quality timothy or mixed hay divided into two feeds.

There is considerable danger of botulinus poisoning (botulism) when moldy corn is fed. Horses and cattle are most likely to be affected. Hogs will be less likely to be affected.

The true Castilian brunette has
fair colorless skin, brown eyes and
brown or black hair. Her becoming
colors are given below. Remember
always that the shades of these colors
must correspond to the shade of your
type.

Red—In all the clear, transparent
and not too vivid shades.

Orange—With a yellowish cast, and
not too vivid.

Yellow—In every shade; undoubt-
edly the most becoming color of all
for this type.

Green—In all the clear, transparent
shades, ranging from yellowish green
to bluish green.

Blue—In rich, vivid shades again;
not the soft pastel blues that belong
to the blondes.

Purple—Clear, without too much intensity, but not the rich wine or
heather shades.

Orchid—Becoming in transparent
tones rather than smoky pastel shades.

Gray—Wearable, but not as becom-
ing as:

Beige—Which this type can wear
better than any other type.

Brown—Not especially becoming.

Black—Becoming, but sometimes
too heavy and somber for the person-
ality unless lighted by a color touch.

White—Ideal.

Silver—A bit more becoming to the
personality than gold.

Voile Handkerchiefs of
Man-Size Proportions

Fine voile handkerchiefs of man-
size proportions are decorative as well
as useful, for they add a pleasing
note to any sports costume when seen
drooping from a pocket. Wide hems
and hand-drawn work with a bit of
colorful embroidery here and there
furnish the means of embellishment.
These lovely kerchiefs come in the
light shades of rose, beige, lavender,
maize and blue. Large squares of
chiffon and georgette make the most
entrancing handkerchiefs, especially
in patterns favoring the floral themes,
where several shades of one color may
be artfully blended in an all-over de-
sign. Tiny rolled hems stand out es-
pecially, for they usually are of black
and so narrow that they supply the
right amount of color contrast.

Fringed Negligee One
of Season's Favorites

The fringed negligee is perhaps the
most feminine one of the season. The
fringed negligee is the only extremely
feminine type which bears launder-
ing well since lace-trimmed models
are not durable unless continually
dry-cleaned. Fringe washes well and
after washing all that is required is
hanging the garment on a dress hang-
er. After the fringe is thoroughly
dried one can press the satin foundation with an iron. The most attractive fringed robe is made exactly like
a cape-coat except that it has no
sleeves. The main portion of the robe
is plain, opened in front and sleeve-
less and a hip-length cape extends
over this. Cape and skirt portion
have fringed borders. A narrow satin
sash extends about the low waistline.

Stepping in the Right Direction
Pumps of red, blue or green lend a
striking dash of color to the black
and white costumes that are so generally popular.

hundred and fifty men rushed to

hurt. He fractured two ribs

SHADOWY HAND DISTURBS TOWN

Appears on Wall Near Picture of Dead Man.

Aosta, Italy.—Priests and spiritualists, using respectively exorcisms and mediums, are seeking to probe the mystery of a shadowy hand, which for some weeks now has been disturbing the family peace of a modest workman, Giuseppe Della Villa, who lives here with his wife and four children.

Some months ago, a brother of Della Villa, who lived in the house, died, and a few weeks ago, the family hung up a photographic enlargement of the deceased in the room in which he slept.

The first signs of the psychic phenomenon were noted by Della Villa and his wife one night about ten o'clock. The clearly defined shadow of a hand appeared on the wall close to the photograph, and the fingers opened and closed as if trying to grasp something.

The neighbors were called in, and the phenomenon was repeated in the presence of half a dozen people. The dead hand was shadowed on the wall near the photograph on several other occasions, always at night time, and the parish priest was called in to pronounce an exorcism.

This seems to have produced no effect on the shadowy hand, which continued to show up every other night about bedtime.

Some local spiritualists then interested themselves, and brought a medium to the house. According to the medium, the hand is a spirit manifestation from the dead brother, who is trying to convey a message to the family. What this message is, the medium does not pretend to know.

Plan to Strengthen Plane Wings Found

Washington.—Patient work at the bureau of standards is gradually evolving a solution for the problem of aluminum corrosion which may greatly increase the utility of aircraft.

Airplane wings constructed of "doped" cloth stretched over wooden frames are fragile things. To the layman it has long seemed that the strength and durability of the wings would be greater if the frames were made of steel or some aluminum alloy.

The possibilities of metal wings, however, have been greatly restricted by the disposition of the complex alloys to corrode and ruin the expensive fabrics even more rapidly than the conditions of operation have worn out the cloth and wooden structures.

The bureau workers, aided by industrial laboratory experts and equipment, have been seeking a solution of the metal difficulties for some time.

They have determined that, if duraluminum, one of the aluminum alloys of sufficient lightness and strength for plane wings, is coated with pure aluminum by a metal spray process, it can stand even salt water exposure for a year without deterioration.

Some experts are hopeful that by adding a corrosion resistant to the material through special treatment of the alloy during preparation it will be possible to produce all-metal aircraft that will be fireproof and durable.

Exhume Shakespeare for Science, Demand

London.—The body of William Shakespeare may at last be unearthed in the interest of science. For 300 years his grave has been protected by the awe-inspiring verse which says:

Good Friend for Jesus Sake Forbear
To Dig the Dust Enclosed Here,
Blest be ye Man yt Spares These Stones,
And Cysrt be he yt Moves my Bones.

But now a movement is on foot to ask for a "reverent and scientific official examination" of the poet's grave and a measurement of his skull.

A British scientific journal, the Antiquarian, calls attention to the fact that while the remains of Ben Jonson, Milton and Cromwell were subjected to indignities, on the other hand, a number of famous men's bones have been disinterred in a manner which made the ceremony a tribute to their greatness.

New Problem

Washington.—A new problem for officials in cities with a colored lighting system for traffic control has developed—color blindness of automobile drivers.

California Once Was Porpoise Playground

New York.—Porpoises, little brothers of the whales, once swam in the shallow seas that are now dry land in California. A newly discovered fossil, reported by Dr. William K. Gregory and Dr. Remington Kellogg of the American Museum of Natural History, links California of a hundred thousand years ago with South America of today, for the bones dug up by a San Diego naturalist, Charles K. Sternberg, closely resemble those of a small group of living porpoises that are now known to be found only in certain rivers of the southern part of South America. The teeth of the newly discovered fossils are shaped like little battle axes.

Met at Home of Miss Virginia Porter—Next Meeting With Miss Mary List.

The Monroe Champion Sewing club met at the home of Miss Virginia Porter on July 19.

Our meeting was opened by repeating the Lord's prayer. Each member read a verse from the Bible when roll was called. All members sang some songs with Miss Julia Hosler as pianist, old business and new business was brought before the house and discussed.

The girls accomplished very much in our sewing. Our plans were discussed about the picnic at Carpenter's grove and what each member should bring. After our meeting was over refreshments were served by Mrs. Porter and daughters. We adjourned to meet at the home of Miss Mary Margaret List, on August 9.

Longer Skirts to Be Mode in Paris

Brevity, However, Continues for Sports Clothes for Sake of Activity.

Paris has already signed her Letter of Fashions for late summer days and the early days of autumn, so that as fast as one successful wardrobe is completed, one's mind and eye turns to the edicts of the famous couturiers in Paris. The "dernier cri" in matters of good dressing says a Paris fashion correspondent in the Kansas City Star, come to the world through collections of models shown for the "demi-saison," as the French term midseason clothes. But when all is said and done, the new models do not mean those exclusively for between seasons but herald, as well, coats, suits and many frocks which are to be worn in the early autumn.

One of the most important topics in the world of fashion is that of the length of skirts, and upon this pivots one of the most exciting bits of news that rushes out of the dressmaking portals. They are longer. With these few words, it seems that the whole story is told, but much more is to be said upon this vital subject in the ways of the mode. Sports clothes obviously hew to the line of brevity for the sake of activity, so that the distance of the hemline from the ground instantly segregates fashions into two wholly different classes: those of sports character and dressy types. For afternoon and evening wear Paris not only sponsors but accepts the longer skirt, an idea which glided forth in many guises for the early summer modes and which now stands as an established fact. Midseason showings have emphasized the longer-skirted frock, not only in its illusion, but in its reality, and frankly shows that the lengthened skirt is not a fly-by-night fashion, but one that is descending upon us with avigity.

In an attractive frock named "Folie," the loose panels, which remind one of box plaits, come below the body of the dress, which in itself is longer, while the panels add a few more inches to the depth. But this is only one of hundreds of frocks shown in Paris wherein the skirt is longer. Circular skirts are both longer and wider. Draped models always descend at the point of the drapey whether this is in the center front of the skirt or one side, while fan-plaiting is inset at both sides of the skirt to give fullness as well as depth at these side points. A point of length, shown in earlier collections—the long back dip in evening gowns of chiffon—finds emphasis in the midseason shows so that one is guided into safe channels of correct fashions by choosing a simple unadorned gown in either a pastel tone or one of the small floral prints which have such great vogue this season.

As if a vote had been taken as to which color would be most popular for late summer and early autumn, the couturiers of Paris showed quantities of gray in every imaginable type of frock, coat and ensemble. Unlike the grays we used to know, which were hard and cold, the new grays have a pinkish tone, and some appear to be mixed with white, which softens them enough to become many types of coloring. Blues are passing because the strain of popularity is too great to hold them for the late mode, and in the place of blue comes golden and reddish brown shades, which taper to points of biscuit and delicate tints of champagne. Green stands among the unbanished, while purple tones, such as those of the pansy and violet ink, advance with enthusiasm in the procession of colors.

Chic Street Frock of Saturn Red Frost Crepe

Yvonne Taylor, motion picture player, wearing a smart street frock of saturn red frost crepe. The two tiers of the skirt are edged with red and white checks, while the same motif trims the bell-shaped sleeves and the square neckline. The yoke in the bodice is tucked with georgette. A black patent leather belt is worn.

AMUSEMENTS

If you ever wanted to wring the neck of the lady who gives you wrong numbers or if you've ever felt a desire to punch the individual who rings off in the middle of interesting conversations, come on down to the Met theater. "The Telephone Girl" as portrayed by Madge Bellamy in Paramount's latest Herbert Brennon production, proves to be a winsome little miss who is more to be praised than impaled. In addition to this, she's quite brave and refuses to give a number—altho it's in the interest of the plot that this is done.

And talking of plot, "The Telephone Girl" has lots of it. Remember William C. De Mille's play "The Woman?" Elizabeth Meehan based her scenario on Mr. De Mille's thriller. It seems that some years before the picture opens there had been an Atlantic City excursion in which two persons had met and separated. Then we switch to election eve and a dinner being given to Matthew Standish, the man who will seemingly become governor. His opponent, Governor Mark Robinson, has discovered the forgotten incident and is endeavoring to use it. The owner of the party's newspaper promises to print the story only if the woman's name can be found.

Standish is now happily married as is the woman. Two political machines go into action. What's the outcome? As the evening advances all the separate wires start to gather and right into Kitty O'Brien's hands! Kitty is the telephone operator at Standish hotel. There's also added interest in Kitty's love affair with Tom Blake, Robinson's brother-in-law.

Intelligent direction is contributed by Mr. Brenon and all the players give admirably polished performances. In addition to Miss Bellamy Holbrook Binn, Warner Baxter, May Allison and Lawrence Gray are featured. Here's a good entertainment.

Oriental Delicacy

One of the most delicious vegetables used in great quantities in the Orient and now being introduced into this country is the young bamboo shoot. Chinese consider the tiny shoots of the bamboo a delicacy. In many respects the bamboo is not unlike asparagus.

When the Children Come Trudging In..

Is there something about the looks of their shoes that remind you that cheap materials can be made to look nice when a shoe is new, but that it soon goes to pieces on the romping feet of an active boy or girl?

Or are your children wearing our Poll-Parrot shoes, the kind that keep their shape and give such excellent service because they're made up to that high standard of solid leather value? That's the kind of materials the makers of "Star Brands" put in their shoes.

AN IMPROVEMENT

"All men," said the woman who had kept a boarding house—"all men, dearie, is brutes."

Her friend nodded her gray head wisely. She had been married twice.

"Yes," she agreed. "No one knows that better than me, an' though me second ain't no saint, I'll say this for 'im—he's better'n me first. He's in jail so much that I have practically all I earn for me own use!"

Same Substance

"Molly," said some one to the little daughter of the clergyman, "does your father preach the same sermon twice?"

"I think perhaps he does," returned Molly cautiously, "but he talks loud and soft in different places the second time, so it doesn't sound the same."

Gentle Father

The hour was late. All was hushed and dark. Suddenly the stillness was broken by a crash from upstairs.

"G-g-g-good heavens, what was that, d-d-d-darling?" exclaimed the timid young man.

"Merely father dropping a hint," replied the girl, quite unalarmed.

Those Crowds

"Don't you hate crowds?"
"I should think I do. At the last football match I fainted and had to walk three miles before I could fall down."

Waiter!

He—I thought the doctor told you not to eat any rich food before going to bed.

She—Then I won't go to bed. Order me some lobster salad, please.

A Logical Hint

The Wife (wearily)—I've talked to you until I am worn out.

Why Mince Words?

This is the open season when automobile manufacturers go gunning for buyers. Read the extravagant claims .. the boasts .. the adjectives and superlatives. You are entitled to the facts. Every high priced, largest-type car has lost sales this year. Although several of the smaller, low-priced cars show gains, the industry as a whole shows a loss as this is written. Yet in contrast Auburn in the first 5½ months of this year built as many cars as all of last year. And in 1926 Auburn doubled its production over 1925. New type merchandise, of greater value for less money did it. Cars that perform better, ride and drive easier and endure longer did it. The Straight Eight type of car is the undisputed leader today. No Straight Eight is more successful than Auburn. Facts prove it, in the hands of owners as well as in official contests conducted by the American Automobile Association. The reasons for Auburn's extraordinary success are all built into the car itself. We claim it is the greatest value on the market..... bar none..... and will let the car itself prove it with you at the wheel.

Extensive Entertainment Program is Announced For Ohio State Fair

In addition to the automobile and horse races and a musical program, many vaudeville and hippodrome acts have been contracted for to round out the entertainment phase of the 1927 Ohio State Fair, which begins August 26, at Columbus. The entertainment features will be both at the Coliseum and at the

Grandstand, the performance at the Coliseum serving as a complement to the main attraction—the Night Horse Show proper.

Announcement of the booking for the Fair of the Uylene Japs immediately acquaints amusement lovers with the fact that this is one of the cleverest of Oriental Sextettes that has ever appeared at any fair. In this meritorious act there are six athletic young men, who appear in an equilibristic pot-pourri that for speed agility and originality is unequalled. The Uylene Japs are quite an innovation in this country, having been playing the leading theatres throughout the world.

The Joe Boganny Co., the Lunatic Bakers, comedian acrobats, a company of nine people, come directly from England. Another European company, the Antinis, offer wire-walking performances. This year an extensive aerial display will be featured, five separate acts having been booked.

BULB INJURY CAUSED IT ALL

Dr. E. E. Oliver Recalls What Wood's Former Secretary Told Him In the Philippines.

How did Major-General Leonard Wood's trouble start? That question can be answered by Dr. E. E. Oliver who was serving the government in the Philippines at the time that General Wood was first operated on for removal of a tumor from his skull.

Dr. Oliver learned of it from Charles Moralis, who had been secretary to General Wood in Cuba and who was much concerned about his former chief's condition at the time.

Moralis told Dr. Oliver that at the time General Wood was in Cuba he was injured when arising from his desk. His head came in contact with the sharp point of an electric light bulb and the scalp was punctured.

From that time on his trouble developed and explains why the government did not call on General Wood for much active service during the World War.

It also explains why he was sent to Argentina as an envoy for it gave him a chance to recuperate.—Chillicothe News-Advertiser.

SANCTIONED BY SCIENCE

Salting asparagus beds as a part of the regular fertilizer program, long a traditional practice among gardeners, has received the sanction of science, according to a report by Dr. William Rudolph, of the New Jersey agricultural experiment station.

The late Lewis Heen for years fertilized his asparagus bed with salt and furnished this market every spring with choice asparagus tips.

GLORIA MEND had always been of the opinion that she would marry no one who did not love nature and beauty even as much as she did. Now, with two suitors, she repeated the declaration and wished that Malcomb Turner, large and quiet, would say or do something to qualify in her lists.

If Malcomb loved beauty he kept it to himself or displayed the affection by driving her to places which called forth her enthusiasm. He had no words for a sunset, no rhapsodies for a grove or a forest stream. Sometimes the girl wondered if the presence of beauty did not silence him and if this might be proof of a greater appreciation than was hers. Again she questioned his capabilities to admire. Gloria was puzzled and a little disappointed. Then Winton Downs, long of hair and soft of voice, came to town and talked and talked to her rapidly of many things of which she had never dreamed.

"I am a poet at soul," said Winton, "and my poems are no less great because they are felt and not expressed. I am not one of those who would fasten names to the flowers and ticket the birds." There was more in the same strain and at last Gloria felt she was in the presence of a man who knew and understood. Suddenly the prosaic Malcomb appeared as no more than one of the plodding millions.

From the first the two men had no liking for each other. Winton professed an entire lack of understanding of one who could be so indifferent to the niceties and delicacies of life, and Malcomb regarded Downs as an insect buzzing for a swat. And this was the situation when Gloria prevailed upon Malcomb to drive the three to a week-end party in the hills. "I told Jessie," she said, speaking of the hostess, "that you would drive Winton and me out."

After the car had left the highway and was running slower over an ascending and dust-cushioned Vermont road, Winton became impressed with a blue haze which filled the hollows. He could talk of nothing else and Gloria, rejoicing in her companion, gave him all her attention.

"Blue haze," Malcomb grunted, "that's smoke." He appeared nervous and stepped on the gas while the poet and the girl exchanged glances which spoke pity of a man who could see in this purple veiling nothing but smoke. A group of dirt-streaked, excited men halted them as they rounded a curve.

"You stay with the car and be ready to drive back for supplies," one ordered Gloria, showing a star as he talked. "And you two take tails and follow Bill there."

"But I say," Winton protested, "we are on our way to a party." Malcomb had peeled his coat and was rolling up his sleeves.

"Well, you'll have party enough. There's a bad fire burning and if we don't beat it soon, it will be in the state grove. Hurry!"

It was Malcomb who seized Winton and forced him along until they joined a long line of men fighting desperately to beat out an edging front of flame which, downed at one place, came to life in another. The air was filled with choking smoke and the heat was all but unbearable. The noise of heavy sacks slapping upon burning grass fell in the crackle of blazing brush. Doggedly, desperately the men fought, their faces streaming with sweat and their muscles aching. Malcomb worked so hard he had no opportunity to watch Winton. At the end of two hours the wind died and the line of tails which had been given way advanced. There was a triumphant shout along the row of blackened men.

Back to the road they came, happy and tired.

"We saved the grove!" Malcomb greeted Gloria, and she looked at him wonderingly. She sought Winton and found him talking to the leader of the crew.

"You may be sure," he was saying, "I will send in a bill for ruined clothes and for my time and that with it will go my formal protest. You had no right." Malcomb pulled him away, thrust him into the automobile and drove on. It was a silent ride, but Gloria, this time, was seated beside the driver while the angry poet rode alone behind.

"The grove," Gloria said at last, "you helped to save it."

"It was the best day's work I have done in years."

And they quite forgot the man in the back seat.

Great French

"When the Legion gets to Paris some great French will be heard."

John J. Wicker, Jr., national travel director, was talking at a luncheon in New York about the Legion's forthcoming Paris convention.

"Yes," he went on, "the Parisian waiter will hear a lot of French like the movie queen's."

"A cafe-au-lait, still voo play, without milk," said the movie queen.

"The waiter smiled in the polite yet subtle French way."

POMPEII'S FALL TOLD BY PLINY

Excavation Work by Italy
Recalls Narrative by Eyewitness.

New York.—As the work of excavating Herculaneum officially began under the auspices of Italy's king the other day, old Vesuvius stirred and started into life, hurling blazing rocks and smoke clouds high into the air as if in protest at the unearthing of a city it had buried 1,848 years ago. But, according to scientists, there is little danger of Mount Vesuvius repeating the terrific outbursts of 79 A. D., and so the celebrating throngs made merry, even into the night, when brilliant fireworks lighted up the Bay of Naples, vying with the bursts of flame high up in the volcano's crater.

It is a different picture that Pliny the Younger draws—a picture of terror-ridden days and nights, presaged by violent earth tremors that leveled many houses before the awful spectacle of fire was dimly seen through a rain of blazing stone and ash by a doomed humanity. Yet concerning the disaster he writes with a philosophical detachment that makes one wonder at his powers of observation and presence of mind in such a panicky time.

Eighteen at Time of Disaster.

Pliny the Younger was only eighteen at the time of Mount Vesuvius' eruption, yet remarkably precocious and devoted to study. Born to riches in an honorable family, the early death of his father led to his adoption as a son by the elder Pliny, his uncle, Caius Plinius Caecilius Secundus was the youth's name, his mother being Plinia, the elder Pliny's sister, and his father, Caius Caecilius, of a plebeian family that nevertheless numbered consuls and other men of note in its ranks. The father's health, however, probably was responsible for the fame his son achieved, for the elder Pliny, renowned naturalist and man of letters, saw to it that his adopted son was given the best of education and schooled in the literary and philosophical learning that meant so much to him.

Vespasian, first emperor of the Flavian dynasty, came to the end of his worthy rule over Rome in the year tragedy stalked in the Bay of Naples. The dissolute times of Nero had been followed with the bloodshed of civil wars under the Emperors Galba, Otho, and Vitellius before Vespasian was placed at the empire's head to restore good times. He passed on to his son, Titus, the rule of Rome, and the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum. In the first summer of Titus' short reign, was one of three tragedies that marred his otherwise excellent disposition of Roman government. A fire in Rome nearly as bad as that of Nero's day and a time of plague which followed it were the other two.

No Indication of Eruption.

To the Romans clustered along the beautiful shores of the Bay of Naples in villas and close-built cities in 79 A. D., there was no indication that Mount Vesuvius might erupt. Earthquakes were not uncommon in the region; in fact, one in 63 A. D. had been of a devastating nature. The Roman towns grouped along the crescent-shaped bay shore, starting at the northern promontory, were: Misenum, Baiæ, Puteoli, Neapolis, Herculaneum, Pompeii and Stabiae.

At Misenum existed a naval station. Baiæ was a popular bathing resort. Neapolis was one of the largest Roman metropolises. Pompeii was a more or less commercial center, and Herculaneum the summer resort of the wealthy. For this reason the task of digging it from beneath 100 feet of lava and volcanic mud is expected to reveal finer literary and art treasures than those uncovered at Pompeii in the past.

Pliny the Younger, in 79 A. D., was spending the summer with his uncle and mother near Misenum, the elder Pliny being in command of the Roman fleet stationed there. To the south and east rose the vine and tree-clad mountain slopes, completely covering Vesuvius in such manner that there was no suspicion of volcanic forces slumbering there.

Saw Death of Uncle.

Here Pliny, who began practice as an advocate a year later, witnessed the eruption and saw his uncle go to his death in an effort to rescue people caught on the bay shore closer to the volcano's mouth. Pliny's description of the disaster the world owes to the historian Tacitus, who some years later wrote asking for the details surrounding the elder Pliny's death and for an account of the dangers which the youth himself escaped.

"On the 24th of August," Pliny first wrote, "about one in the afternoon, my mother desired him (the elder Pliny) to observe a cloud which appeared of a very unusual size and shape. He had just taken a turn in the sun, and, after bathing himself in cold water, and making a light lunch, came back to his books; he immediately arose and went out upon a rising ground from whence he might get a better sight of this very uncommon appearance."

"A cloud, from which mountain was uncertain at this distance, was ascending, the appearance of which I can not give you a more exact description of than by likening it to a pine tree, for it shot up to a great height in the form of a very tall trunk, which spread itself out at the top into a sort of branches, occasioned. I imagine, either by a sudden gust of air that impelled it, the force of which decreased as it advanced upward, or the cloud itself, being pressed back again by its own weight, expanded in the manner I have mentioned; it appeared sometimes bright and sometimes dark and spotted, according as it was either more or less impregnated with earth and cinders.

Youth Stays to Study.

"This phenomenon seemed to a man of such learning and research as my uncle extraordinary and worth further looking into. He ordered a light vessel to be got ready, and gave me leave, if I liked, to accompany him. I said I had rather go on with my work; and it so happened he had himself given me something to write out. As he was coming out of the house, he received a note from Rectina, the wife of Bassus, who was in the utmost alarm at the imminent danger which threatened her; for, her villa lying at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, there was no way of escape but by sea. She earnestly entreated him therefore to come to her assistance. He accordingly changed his first intention, and what he had begun from a philosophical he now carried out in a noble and generous spirit."

"He ordered the galleys to put to sea, and went himself on board with an intention of assisting not only Rectina, but the several other towns which lay thickly strewn along that beautiful coast. Hastening then to the place from whence others fled with the utmost calmness and presence of mind as to be able to make and dictate his observations upon the motion and all the phenomena of that dreadful scene."

Burning Rocks Fall on Ships.

"He was now so close to the mountain that the cinders, which grew thicker and hotter the nearer he approached, fell into the ships, together with pumice stones and black pieces of burning rock; they were in danger, too, not only of being aground by the sudden retreat of the sea, but also from the vast fragments which rolled down from the mountain and obstructed all the shore. Here he stopped to consider whether he should turn back again; to which the pilot advising him, 'Fortune,' said he 'favors the brave; steer to where Pomponianus lies.'"

The brave elder Pliny, his nephew told Tacitus, won his way to the shore where he greeted his friend Pomponianus, maintaining a cool front in the face of nature's cataclysm for the benefit of the latter by ordering a bath and lying down to sleep as night came on and the turbulent waves prevented them from sailing away. Pliny continues:

Nearly Hemmed In.

The trapped Romans finally decided for the fields and went out "having pillows tied upon their heads" for protection, and after going to the shore of the bay the elder Pliny suddenly fell and died. The opinion of his nephew was that death came from suffocation from the fumes in the air, but it is probable that a sudden attack of illness was responsible, since Stabiae, whither he had gone, was about ten miles from the volcano's mouth. Pliny's account of his uncle's death was followed by another letter to Tacitus in which he described his and his mother's escape.

Earthquake Felt First.

"There had been noticed for many days before," he wrote, "a trembling of the earth, which did not alarm us much, as this is quite an ordinary occurrence in Campania; but it was so particularly violent that night that it not only shook but actually overturned, as it would seem, everything about us."

Pliny and his mother were both awakened from uneasy sleep after the elder Pliny had gone and fled the house to sit in an open courtyard. There the youth began nonchalantly to read "Livy," as he says, either in "courage or folly," and he continued, although a friend of his uncle's reproved him. The tottering buildings finally persuaded them to leave the town.

Escapes With Mother.

After this a black cloud of ashes came upon them, and Pliny led his mother by the hand to a place away from the main road, so that they would not be trampled by the panic-stricken mobs in flight. He vividly describes the cries made by parents and children separated and lost in the blackness of artificial night and the oft-expressed fear that the end of the world had come.

When light at last returned Pliny and his mother went back to Misenum to await the sad news of his uncle and he closes his letter to Tacitus with the modest declaration that his narrative is "not in the least worthy for inclusion in history; a fact which literature today vehemently disputes, inasmuch as Pliny's story remains the world's most thorough and enlightening description of a disaster nearly sixteen centuries ago, and the only written account by an eyewitness."
